vision and plan

By Brett Bergie

Public Interest Alberta and its Post-Secondary Education Task Force recently released a discussion document titled, Where to From Here: A Vision and Plan for Post-Secondary Education in Alberta. The document sets out an ambitious plan for Alberta's post-secondary education system arrived at after extensive consultations with the public and deliberations by members of Public Interest Alberta's Post-Secondary Education Task Force.

This vision and plan arrives on the provincial scene at an opportune time since the Government of Alberta is currently engaged in its own process to build “a learning society” with post-secondary education at the centre of those discussions. Shortly after the government launched its own system review in 2005, Public Interest Alberta assembled a campaign to provide the public with opportunities to participate more fully in this important dialogue.

“We held a series of public forums around the province,” says

A tale of accountability: the Canada Social Transfer and post-secondary education

By Brett Bergie

The Federal Budget, tabled last month by Finance Minister Jim Flaherty, promises to invest $800 million into Canada's post-secondary education system through the Canada Social Transfer (CST). The system, however, will have to wait until the 2008-09 fiscal year to receive any of that new money because the federal government lacks the necessary accountability mechanisms to ensure that the provinces will indeed spend the new money in their jurisdictions on post-secondary education.

The problem of accountability arises because the CST is a block transfer that provides funding from Ottawa to the provinces with virtually no strings except to support the provision of education and social services. Under the current transfer agreement with the provinces, the federal government cannot simply

A measure of academic workplace climate

Each year, ACIFA conducts a survey of its members across the province to obtain their views on working conditions and attitudes within their institutions.

The survey's results are used to measure workplace climate over time and across institutions. The results help to inform faculty associations on emerging issues at their respective campuses. The results also provide an opportunity for faculty associations to discuss issues with their administrations.

The survey, which enjoys a relatively high participation rate, is self-administered and it consists of 13 standard questions (found to the right).

The survey asks academic staff members to indicate their level of agreement with the statements on a Likert Scale of 1 to 5. A response of 5 indicates strong agreement; a response of 1 indicates strong disagreement. A response of 3 is considered neutral.

Respondents are asked to answer the questions and return completed questionnaires back to their faculty associations before ACIFA tabulates all of the results. Respondents answer the survey anonymously.

A cross-institutional chart of the results of the 2006 Climate Survey appears opposite. Mean scores for two previous years are provided for purposes of comparison.

Thirteen Standard Climate Survey Questions

1. My institution demonstrates a strong commitment to improving my teaching skills.
2. My institution demonstrates a strong commitment to improving my discipline-specific knowledge.
3. I have enough time to attend to my professional development needs.
4. Senior administration communicates openly with faculty.
5. I am informed in a timely manner about important changes that affect me.
6. Input from faculty is sought AND seriously considered in decision-making at my institution.
7. Senior administration understands day-to-day challenges faced by instructors.
8. When making decisions, this institution refers to one or all of: a mission statement, a statement of goals, or a statement of values.
9. Outstanding performance by instructors is rewarded.
10. My institution demonstrates a strong commitment to my health and well being.
11. Academic council has a meaningful impact on academic decisions.
12. The president of this institution provides effective leadership.
13. I have the resources I need to do my job effectively.

earmark a certain portion of the transfer to one priority and expect that the provinces will spend that money according to Ottawa’s wishes.

As post-secondary education becomes increasingly important to both Ottawa and the provinces, many observers were expecting last month’s Federal Budget Speech to include an announcement of a separate federal transfer on post-secondary education. Such a move is not without precedent and would have enabled the government to put new money into post-secondary education immediately. In 2004, the federal government established two transfers, the Canada Health Transfer and the CST, by separating the Health Transfer from what was then the Canada Health and Social Transfer.

Instead of creating a separate transfer for post-secondary education, the federal government will take the next several months to discuss accountability measures with the provinces and establish an agreement to ensure that the new funding it wants to pump into the post-secondary education system will be spent by the provinces accordingly. Reaching such an agreement between Ottawa and the provinces is invariably a difficult task in Canada, but there are positive signs that suggest a deal may be within reach. For instance, the provinces and territories are already on record urging Ottawa to play a greater role in funding post-secondary education.

In a recent open letter to Monte Solberg, Federal Minister of Human Resources and Social Development, the Councils of Ministers of Education, Canada (CMEC), called on the federal government to “immediately restore the intergovernmental transfer that supports post-secondary education to 1994-95 levels.” The new $800 million in funding promised in the budget is a significant step toward restoring federal transfers to the provinces to their pre-1995 levels, but the new funding falls well short of meeting the target set by the CMEC.

The federal government says that the CST funding for post-secondary education will reach $3.2 billion in 2008-09, and starting the following year, the government will increase the CST annually by three per cent. This is an improvement over the current situation where the CST lacks an automatic escalator to account at least partly for inflation and pressures associated with a growing population.

The Federal Budget also contains new initiatives that can take effect in the current fiscal year. There is new money to support research and attract new academics. The three granting councils—the Canadian Institutes of Health and Research, the National Sciences and Engineering Council of Canada, and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada—will share $85 million to fund research activity.

The government will also invest $15 million in additional funding to support the indirect costs of research. Lastly, the government will invest $35 million over two years and $27 million per year thereafter to expand the Canada Graduate Scholarships.

GET TO THE POINT

Ken McKee, an instructor at NAIT, has authored the latest set of Get To The Point, MS Office 2007 software training manuals, for the coming academic year, in expanded versions. The new software has a completely new look that is very different than previous versions. It is strongly recommended that instructors spend some time working with it to be fully prepared for the coming fall classes. The manuals are meant to cover typical course objectives for college classes and take students from a beginner level to advanced levels in one-half of the time! The manuals contain Learner Centered Activities that have the students busily completing assignment after assignment, on their own, at their own pace. Ken has manuals available for MS Office Word, PowerPoint, Excel, Project, Outlook, and Access. In addition to these manuals he has AutoCAD 2007, PhotoShop CS11, and Business Financial Mathematics. Please visit Ken’s website for further information at www.GetToThePoint.ca or call him at 780-416-9659. You can also catch Ken at the ACIFA conference at the end of May where he will have a display table.

Bill Moore-Kilgannon, Executive Director of Public Interest Alberta. “We also held our own provincial conference in February 2006 to hear from Albertans about the critical issues facing post-secondary education and to explore solutions.”

Through the consultations, Albertans offered a broad range of concerns and perspectives on the system’s challenges and directions required to remedy problems and improve the system. Public Interest Alberta relied on these insights and suggestions as key elements in assembling a vision and plan that is premised on an absolute commitment to develop the full potential of every Albertan, and the report’s recommendations follow from that conviction.

The document itself, however, is more than an enumeration of recommendations. David Milner, Past-President of ACIFA, explains that “the document recognizes there is a tremendous opportunity before Alberta to make prudent policy changes and substantial and new investments in post-secondary education that will have far-reaching effects on Alberta’s global competitiveness and the quality of life enjoyed by all

To grasp this opportunity, Public Interest Alberta advocates that Alberta must increase its post-secondary education participation rate—which currently is among the lowest in Canada—by removing financial, cultural, and physical barriers that inhibit Albertans from achieving their full potential. It also requires the system’s capacity to grow and meet increasing demands placed on it by students, but expanding the system must not come at the expense of quality. Rather, the province must simultaneously protect quality by making the necessary investments to ensure Alberta has among the lowest student to faculty ratios in the country.

Promoting quality in the post-secondary education system also requires attracting and retaining the best faculty, staff, and post-graduate students, and Alberta’s success in this regard coupled with new and substantial public investments in support of research will help to ensure that leading edge advances can be made to happen here.

“In order to make a difference,” adds Moore-Kilgannon, “we need the government to commit to funding levels that will allow us to make substantial improvements in the quality, accessibility, and affordability of our [post-secondary education] system.” The Public Interest Alberta document calls on the government to provide funding levels to public post-secondary education institutions that rival the highest levels among North American jurisdictions.

Public Interest Alberta advocates that in addition to the promise of sustainable economic prosperity, the promise of a high quality, accessible, and affordable post-secondary education system is also in a society that has improved social well being. According to Public Interest Alberta, the social outcomes related to post-secondary education are just as important as prosperity and economic outcomes.

The Public Interest Alberta Task Force includes representatives from ACIFA, the Confederation of Alberta Faculty Associations, the Non-Academic Staff Association at the University of Alberta, the Alberta Union of Public Employees, and provincial student groups from the college, institute, and university sectors.

This article is the final instalment of a three-part series on perspectives and policies on post-secondary education in Alberta. In November’s edition of Faculty Circuit, we outlined the post-secondary education platforms of the eight candidates competing for the Leadership of the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta. In December’s edition, we profiled the post-secondary education positions of Alberta’s opposition parties.

The labour scene

By Terry Sway, Labour Relations Officer

At Grant MacEwan College, the Faculty Association and the Board of Governors reached a memorandum of agreement. The one-year agreement completes a four-year term with the fourth and final year limited to a re-opener for salary only. The parties have ratified the agreement with a 4.1% salary increase effective July 1, 2007.

There are four associations still active in collective bargaining. They are, in no particular order, NAIT Academic Staff Association, SAIT Academic Faculty Association, Lakeland College Faculty Association, and Lethbridge College Faculty Association.

The collective agreements for all four expire on June 30, 2007. As these negotiations conclude, details of the settlements will be reported in upcoming editions of the Faculty Circuit.

Congratulations!

Doug Frattini, ACIFA's Treasurer, is a proud, new Grandpa. The baby, Daniel David, was born on March 11, 2007, to Krista (Mom and daughter of Doug) and Dave (Dad). Danny Boy, an affectionate nickname given to the baby by Grandpa Doug, arrived into the world at 19 inches, 6 pounds, and 11 ounces.
